GDPR: How the CBSS Secretariat handles event registration information

When participants sign up for CBSS Secretariat events through an online registration form, like Google forms or any other registration tool, the CBSS Secretariat collects data important for the execution of that event. Such data includes name, work title and affiliation, email address and dietary restrictions. It can also include the telephone number and nationality of the participant.

The CBSS Secretariat collects the names and work affiliation of its event/meeting participants in order to be able to identify which organisations and representatives are taking part in its activities. Email and phone details are collected for contact purposes, and nationality information for possible visa arrangements, as well as to keep track of regional representation important to our organisation. Information on dietary restrictions is only collected for the purpose of ensuring that all participants will be served suitable food.

The CBSS Secretariat never shares this information with third parties. If the CBSS Secretariat is organising an event open to the public, the CBSS Secretariat would not share the registration information with anyone else, with the exception of dietary restrictions which would be shared with catering staff.

If the CBSS Secretariat is organising a closed project meeting, the CBSS Secretariat might share information such as names, work affiliations and email addresses of the project participants with the project members for the purposes of networking and project execution. Participants not comfortable with their contact details being shared with other project members are expected to notify the CBSS Secretariat of this wish. Dietary restrictions, phone numbers and information on citizenship would not be shared with project members.

The CBSS Secretariat does not keep registration lists for longer than necessary for the execution of the event. After an event has taken place, the registration information is disposed of through deletion.
